RegionalHelpWanted.com to provide free employment ads in NYC

(Poughkeepsie, New York) Eric P. Straus, President & CEO of RegionalHelpWanted.com, Inc. announced today that the company's New York City job board, www.BigAppleHelpWanted.com, will be provided at no charge until further notice.

In commenting on the offer, Straus said, "In an effort to help rebuild the infrastructure and economy of the world's capital, RegionalHelpWanted.com is providing FREE help wanted advertising to any employer in the New York metropolitan area that has been affected by this terrible tragedy. Effective immediately and until further notice, all job listings on www.BigAppleHelpWanted.com will be accepted at no charge. Out of respect to those who perished, the website will also carry no commercial advertising of any sort. It is our small contribution to the massive effort of rebuilding our beloved New York City."

Robert P. Chieffo, the company's COO, stated, "As with everyone else in America, all of us at RegionalHelpWanted.com are deeply saddened and troubled by the events of last week. We feel almost guilty making an offer that could be construed as an attempt at self-promotion in light of these tumultuous events. But we firmly believe that those of us not directly impacted have a patriotic duty to resume commerce and to help rebuild our businesses and the economy as quickly and proudly as possible."

All companies with operations in the New York metropolitan area that are in need of employees and all area job seekers are encouraged to take advantage of this opportunity to post any available jobs that may have been created as a result of these terrorist attacks.

www.BigAppleHelpWanted.com will remain free to job seekers and employers for as long as the need exists. For more information please visit www.BigAppleHelpWanted.com. God bless America.
